EUROPA-ROSARIUM

The World’s Largest Collection of Roses

... discover and experience

The world's largest collection of roses was founded in 1903. It is home to more than 8,300 varieties and species of roses. The diversity of the Queen of Flowers, from Antiquity to the Modern Day is displayed in a special rose garden.

A uniquely arranged collection, compiled by a team of experts throughout the course of a century, provides scientists, growers and rose fans with an insight into the history of how the rose developed.

A Pilgrimage for Rose Lovers

The chronicle of the EUROPA ROSARIUM shares strong links to the development of roses throughout the 20th century.

- In 1897 Peter Lambert, a rose grower from Trier, proposed that the Verein Deutscher Rosenfreunde (Society of German Rose Lovers) founded a Rosarium to be run by the VDR. Its aim was to collect and preserve old varieties which were in danger of becoming extinct. At the instigation of the forward-thinking rose lover Albert Hoffmann the town of Sangerhausen agreed to provide an area of fallow land for use.

- In 1903 the Rosarium was opened covering an area of 1.5 hectares. The cultivation of new varieties as well as the constant addition of other roses to the collection by the rose gardeners resulted in several subsequent extensions of the grounds. Over the course of the decades roses from all corners of the globe have been given a home here.

Trees and Shrubs at the Europa Rosarium

In addition to the unique collection of garden and wild roses, the EUROPA ROSARIUM features a large number of rare trees and shrubs. Around 300 different varieties of trees and shrubs provide a picturesque backdrop for our roses.

Many trees and shrubs were donated by tree nurseries when the EUROPA ROSARIUM was founded and when the grounds were later extended.

Wild roses at the Europa Rosarium

The collection of wild roses should be a particular focus of your visit to the EUROPA ROSARIUM. Alongside the existing cultivated forms of the Rosa family the wild forms or species have been incorporated into the collection of roses housed by the EUROPA ROSARIUM.

With approximately 500 species, cross species and varieties the EUROPA ROSARIUM is home to the largest wild rose collection in the world. The wild roses have been mainly planted in sections.

Millions of rose blossoms ...

are admired by over 100,000 visitors every year. The flowering season of the approximately 500 varieties of wild roses commences as early as the end of May.

Highlights of the interchange between fragrance and colour are when the park roses are in full bloom and the ramblers have covered the pyramids and frames with a profusion of scent and colour. The modern bed and shrub roses flower well into late autumn.

Rose attractions such as the green and black roses, various moss roses, the real oil rose, the smallest roses in the world or roses from Goethe's garden as well as many more rarities can be seen during the flowering season.
